HOW PINK SHIRT DAY BEGAN

In 2007, after a new student at their Nova Scotia school was bullied for wearing a pink shirt, two Grade Twelve students – David Shepherd and Travis Price – bought 50 pink shirts and encouraged their classmates to wear pink shirts to send a strong message against bullying and homophobia.

The next day they went to distribute the shirts and to their surprise the majority of students arrived wearing pink.

This random act of kindness began a global movement

The International Day of Pink was declared by the UNITED NATIONS in 2012 to bring awareness to and to emphasize Anti-Bullying.

Bullying can occur in any age group or stage of life and in any social, familial, or work situation. On Pink Shirt Day, people worldwide wear pink to discourage bullying behaviours and to encourage kindness.
